RESPONSE TO NOTICE TO FILE CORRECTED APPLICATION PAPERS

Sir:

This comes in response to the Notice to File Corrected Application Papers, mailed March 12, 2001. That Notice required substitute drawings because some of the drawings as filed contain text that is not in English. The requirement is respectfully traversed for the reasons stated below.

The present invention includes an embodiment in which documents are searched for in association with the phonetic pronunciation of keywords. The invention can be used for any language, including Japanese (of which the parent originated) or English. Thus, some figures contain text in Japanese characters which have particular phonetic pronunciations. These phonetic pronunciations are relevant to the illustration and meaning of the patent. To translate these Japanese words into English would change the meaning of the Figures (and the whole Patent), as words would no longer have similar phonetic characteristics which previously did in Japanese. The figures which include Japanese characters were intentionally not translated into English for this reason. Thus, to translate these Japanese characters into English would render the examples presented in the Patent invalid.

For example, consider a patent that was originally written in English, and the words “lie” and “lye” were used to illustrate different phonetic pronunciations of the same word. To translate these into Japanese characters would result in entirely different pronunciations, and render the examples presented moot.

It is submitted that to actually translate all of the objected to drawings into English would change the meaning of the Patent. Therefore, the Applicant respectfully requests that the drawings as filed be accepted.

Respectfully submitted,

STAAS & HALSEY LLP
